The Faithfulness Behind Our Work

Over 17,000 people served and empowered last year, thanks to the dedicated work of staff, volunteers and supporters. At Catholic Charities, we track a lot of numbers like those on the front cover of this newsletter — outputs of numbers of people helped; outcomes that strive to measure the transformative influence that we have on their circumstances; and satisfaction rates, just to name a few. Such numbers speak to the needs in the community and how well we’re responding. They help us determine how efficiently we’re directing the resources under our stewardship to make effective impacts on people’s lives. As your Catholic Charities, we are committed to success in accompanying people from crisis to stability and from vulnerability to self-sufficiency.

Having said this, I’m also reminded of the famous words of St. Mother Teresa of Calcutta, “We are called upon not to be successful, but to be faithful.”

Faithfulness is what the numbers can’t fully convey. What makes Catholic Charities truly unique among social services is the faithfulness of our staff, our volunteers, our supporters, and our clients. Their faithfulness to living out our mission, to serving as agents of God’s love, and to boldly trusting that their tireless efforts will make a difference for those in need.

This issue of Blessings celebrates some of these examples of faithfulness behind the numbers. I’m truly moved by “Grandma” Lillian Smith, may she rest in peace. In honoring her 25 years of service in our Foster Grandparents Program, we’re inspired by her faithfulness to the countless children at Rockdale Academy who benefitted from her compassion and care. You’ll also read about several of our staff members, who once walked in similar shoes as our clients and who have now chosen to faithfully give back through their work at Catholic Charities. As our new employee, Javi exclaims, “It’s been kind of like a whole circle.” We highlight here too an example of the faithfulness of our clients, their commitment to their own success by sticking with the demands of our programs. “Just trust the process,” our Parent Education Coordinator Patsy encourages. “You will see a difference.”

Thank YOU for learning more about our work at Catholic Charities through this newsletter. The faithfulness of your prayers, concern for our work, volunteerism, and donations are true keys to our success.

In gratitude,

Tony Stieritz

Volunteer Spotlight: “Grandma” Lillian Smith

“Grandma” Lillian Smith passed away Dec. 4, 2022, at the age of 82, but her legacy lives on in the hearts of the children whose lives she touched.

“Students got the opportunity to not only experience comfort, love and motivation,” says former Rockdale Principal Belinda Tubbs-Wallace, “they also got someone to inspire them to stay in tune with their education.”

Grandma Smith, who graduated from the University of Cincinnati and Western Carolina University, also helped with the Rockdale Academy Community Garden and spent more than 40 years volunteering throughout the Avondale community. Among her many good works, she collaborated with local organizations and friends — including former Bengals players Andy Dalton and A.J. Green — to raise money to purchase Christmas gifts for Rockdale students.

When Sandra arrived at her first Parent Project class, she made it clear she didn’t want to be there. Her son, Kaden, had been getting into trouble, and the two had been fighting a lot at home. Still, Sandra knew she loved her son more than anything. She couldn’t understand what a court-ordered class could tell her about her own child that she didn’t already know.

But by the end of the 10-week class, Sandra had become the Parent Project’s biggest cheerleader.

“I LOVED THIS CLASS,” she wrote in all caps on the post-class survey. “This class made me realize I needed to stop and breathe and be more consistent as a parent, and others are going through the same thing. After completing this class, I realize we communicate better and now spend more time doing fun things again.”

Patsy Bolden, Parent Project Coordinator, has seen this kind of transformation before — and she never tires of it. The classes empower parents of children ages 11-17 to support their children in making healthier, safer choices so they can become successful in all aspects of life.

For many parents, Patsy says, it’s eye-opening to learn that even teens still need to hear their parents say, “I love you.” The class provides foundational principles for expressing love, navigating conflicts, setting boundaries and more.

When parents like Sandra apply those principles at home, things not only change for the better … the change lasts.

Today, more than a year after Sandra completed the Parent Project and Kaden completed the corresponding WhyTry program for teens, the difference in their lives is nothing short of amazing.

Kaden, 17, is doing well in school. He’s pursuing his passion as a baker and cake decorator, and he even got his first job. Plus, he and his mom enjoy Mother-Son Nights regularly.

Patsy says stories like this are a testament to the power of the program — and to the families doing the hard work to get their relationships back on track.

“Just trust this process, and if you start following it, you will see a difference.”

— Patsy Bolden, Parent Project Coordinator

Another Family Transformed by the Parent Project

Mental health is a growing concern, but it can be a difficult topic to discuss. That’s why Catholic Charities is now offering Mental Health First Aid classes. Since the pandemic began, more people — adults and children alike — are experiencing mental health challenges.

Mental Health First Aid is an international, evidence-based program offered through the National Council for Mental Well-Being. It is designed to help individuals recognize the signs and symptoms of mental health concerns so they can engage someone in a conversation, listen non-judgmentally and encourage the person to get help if needed.

“We want to create a blanket of protection against mental health crises in our community,” says Mary Anne Bessler, Catholic Charities’ Parish and Community Outreach Coordinator.

Mary Anne, who co-teaches the class, says Mental Health First Aid also helps reduce stigma around mental health issues.

Open communication supports early intervention. And just like with a physical illness, the sooner a mental health challenge is identified, the better the outcome is likely to be.

“All of us encounter people who are having mental health challenges,” Mary Anne says. “The class gets you to think: ‘How would I have handled this if I were involved with this person?’”

Mental Health First Aid offers a variety of programs for specific communities, including older adults, teens, residents of rural areas, Spanish speakers and people who work with children.

Similar to Red Cross First Aid for physical health, Mental Health First Aid is open to anyone who wants to learn how to help someone in need.

After a Long Journey, He’s Found His Place at Catholic Charities

Like the people he serves, Jared Alexander navigated a long, winding journey before he arrived at Catholic Charities. Now that he’s here as a Mental Health Counselor, he knows he’s exactly where he’s supposed to be.

“I love to see the growth in people, and I feel like I’m doing what I can to help people get to a healthier place,” Jared says. “It feels really rewarding.”

Jared’s path began in corporate marketing, where he built a long, successful career after graduating from Ohio State. But something was missing.

“I enjoyed what I was doing, but I never felt like I was fulfilling the things I was supposed to be doing, contributing to the greater good,” Jared says.

So, in 2015, Jared enrolled in Xavier University’s Clinical Mental Health Counseling program. He continued working full-time and participating in church mission trips to Nicaragua once or twice a year. That’s when his road came to another fork. The organization he volunteered with offered Jared a full-time job. He and his wife sold everything they had, Jared put school on hold, and the couple moved to Nicaragua in 2017.

After three years, Jared’s journey led him back to Cincinnati and back to his studies at Xavier. When he graduated in 2022, he found his way to Catholic Charities, where he serves Spanish-speaking clients every Tuesday in addition to his work in private practice.

“One of the reasons I’m passionate about serving in this community is because I was the foreigner when I was in Nicaragua,” Jared says. “I’m not comparing my circumstance to an immigrant coming from Central America, but I can understand a little bit. I know what it’s like to be in a place where you don’t speak the language, don’t understand how the medical system works... to feel silly asking questions. That’s really the reason I wanted to do this.”

In his work with Catholic Charities, Jared appreciates that he can refer clients within the organization for services like legal assistance so immigrants have the tools they need to build secure, successful lives for themselves.

“There’s something near and dear to my heart about how, when somebody feels under-resourced and doesn’t understand how to get where they want to go. There are people who are native to the area who want to help,” Jared says. “There’s something really warm about that.”

Refugee Resettlement Services Helping Ukrainians Rebuild

As the war in Ukraine enters its second year, Catholic Charities is empowering Ukrainians to create new lives for themselves in Greater Cincinnati.

Catholic Charities added two staff members to meet the needs of the individuals and families fleeing the violence in their home country. The team helps newcomers apply for work authorization and access public benefits like Medicaid and SNAP. They also provide employment services, help enroll children in local schools and register people in English classes when needed.

Annie Scheid, Refugee Resettlement Services Director, says most of the Ukrainians coming to Cincinnati are highly educated, with college degrees or professional certifications. Many speak English proficiently and hope to find jobs in the fields where they worked back home.

Legally, Ukrainians do not have refugee status. Instead, they are considered “humanitarian parolees” for two years. Because their status is temporary, they face unique challenges trying to settle in and start over after the trauma of being forced from their homes.

To help with the transition, Catholic Charities is working to connect Ukrainian migrants with one another and with organizations like the Ukrainian Society of Greater Cincinnati & Dayton.

“Our mission is to improve the quality of life for the people we serve,” Annie explains.

With the help of supporters like you, Ukrainians are finding a welcoming home away from home in Ohio.

A Family Reunited

Catholic Charities recently helped reunite a Ukrainian family that had been separated upon arriving in the United States after having just fled the horrible war with Russia.

In mid-December, a married couple was traveling with the husband’s 17-year-old brother. When they landed in Minneapolis, a bureaucratic mix-up left the younger brother in detention at the airport while the rest of the family was moved on to Cincinnati, where their sponsor lived. (As humanitarian parolees, Ukrainians must have an approved sponsor to enter the U.S.)

Members of Catholic Charities’ Refugee Resettlement Services and Immigration Legal Services teams stepped in to help locate the teenager, ensure his well-being and work through the process alongside the family. In January, the boy was safely reunited with his brother and sister-in-law!
